In Nobody's Girl, Barbara writes: "To those who may question why I chose to write this book and how I could share such deeply traumatic, painful, even horrific experiences, here is my response, 'How could I not?'"

"Breaking my silence is a political statement for me, one of choosing to never again be a voiceless victim. It is a deliberate choice to take my life back and to help others do the same for themselves. Would it matter any less to you if it were only one child being trafficked? Or would it matter more if it were a million children? One child abused and trafficked is too many. All I want to do is make a difference."

"I was a commodity" says Amaya, "I wasn't a human being to them... I shouldn't be on this earth right now. I should be dead."

"When we can help out someone else in this life, and that someone's humanity is somehow restored, I think some part of our own humanity is restored as well."

Pre-order Signed Copies of Nobody's Girl:

In Nobody's Girl, Barbara shares her journey from trafficking victim to human rights advocate, weaving together a story of loss, pain, courage, and transformation.

You can support Amara's work by purchasing a signed copy of Barbara's book, which she will discuss during the event!

When you register for the event, you will be able to pre-order your book!
